What is BRICS Magazine?

BRICS Magazine is a bookazine – a book-like magazine – addressed to global investors, businessmen, politicians, and experts. A business and humanitarian publication on rapid-growth markets, it is issued four times a year and explains how to understand others. The goal of this project is to organize a direct information exchange between the BRICS countries and other emerging markets.

We define a bookazine as a thick magazine with complex printing which is designed for slow reading and filled not in accordance with a constant set of sections, but rather in accordance with the topics chosen. Our bookazine includes (with occasional exceptions) three main kinds of data:

- essays and columns that would fit into “Opinions” or “Recommendations” sections
- indices, ratings, and rankings
- business cases

Industry and event projects as well as investment guides are featured as special add-ons.

Ruben Vardanyan is the Editorial Board Chairman of BRICS Magazine.

The Origins

The original idea behind the project was to create a magazine and subsequently – a media platform for developing markets. But more importantly – to create a publication that would in essence support these markets. The concept was based on research into the coverage of emerging markets in international media. Having studied the issue we reached two principal conclusions:

1 There is no single sizeable media project that would be fully dedicated to emerging markets. Such prominent business publications as The Economist, Financial Times and the Wall Street Journal feature regular articles covering selected countries from this group. They, however, tend to focus on isolated aspects or publish special editions, in blogs and on various websites at best. Only commercial and analytical entities that are not in magazine publishing business tend to adopt a systemic approach toward BRICS and other emerging markets viewing them as an integral trend. Hence the ubiquitous distortions and confusion in describing the challenges that need to be addressed.

2 The second conclusion relates to the expert community in this area. The vast majority of emerging markets specialists in international media are from Europe and the United States. In an American publication a development in Indonesia is almost always likely to be covered by an American expert and not a native of Indonesia. Outside views tend to prevail over domestic opinions, and to this day Brazil, Russia, India, China and South Africa much like other developing markets did not have a media channel that would consolidate their own perspectives.

This status quo has been galvanised in the phrase “London is the capital of BRICS” often used by Western journalists. We remain deeply convinced that the real centres of knowledge, regional and industrial expertise and advice are found inside the BRICS countries and other emerging markets.

Why BRICS?

Back in 2001, in his report entitled “Building Better Global Economic BRICs” Jim O’Neal, the former chairman of the Asset Management department at Goldman Sachs coined the term BRIC to describe the four largest developing economies in the world – Brazil, Russia, India and China. Since that time the acronym has evolved from a mere investment idea to become a geopolitical reality.

The initial meaning hinted at the gradual transition of influence from the developed to the developing economies – a phenomenon that is well underway today. O’Neal emphasised that by 2027 the aggregate GDP of the BRIC countries would surpass that of the G7.

With the arrival of South Africa BRIC turned into BRICS ultimately moulding itself into a political and economic club that was prepared to offer the international community its own agenda and promote the interests of what reached far beyond several dozens of other developing markets.

The real impact of BRICS on the world economy and the fact that this acronym has become synonymous with High-Growth Markets helped us pick the right name for the magazine. Today BRICS is a well-known, respected and popular international brand that requires no further explanation. It appeals not only to the five nations in question but also to all other developing countries.

The BRICS grouping may soon represent even a larger share of global economy and land, as Argentina, Egypt, Ethiopia, Iran, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates have been invited to join as full members from January 1, 2024.

What Does BRICS Magazine Write About?

 BRICS Magazine finds itself inside the developing world and therefore it is uniquely positioned to effectively extract new knowledge from it. The content of the magazine would be best described by its slogan: “Bridging communities. Guiding Investors. Leading Nations”.

Bridging Communities

BRICS stands for a community of people united by their various goals and interests. They serve as the main generator of ideas, concepts and social, cultural and economic trends that directly impact the global agenda. The magazine is a meeting point for business and professional communities of the BRICS countries. Here they can find the entire spectrum of best practices, share their experience in managing various issues and create a blueprint for the new post-Western world in social and business commentaries, case studies, interviews and editorials.

Guiding Investors

BRICS represent the most promising and dynamically developing part of the world economy. The magazine offers a platform where modern day global investors can find the information they need to operate on the target markets and the skills enabling them to understand, predict and act in uncharted territories. The real experience of reaching out to new markets, coverage of specific in-country and regional trends, insider tips and “cheat sheets” from members of governments would inform the most balanced, educated and by extension – most effective investment decisions.

Leading Nations

BRICS is a leading club in the developing world, which stands ready to revamp the global financial architecture, tackle global security issues and claim its rightful place in the world that would reflect its growing economic power. The magazine provides a platform where politicians and their closest aides, global and local think tanks and authors of fundamental publications dedicated to the fates of entire countries and civilisations engage in a discourse in interviews and articles.

Analytical Support and Partners

BRICS Magazine languages

In 2012 the magazine is published in English and Russian. Subsequently, it will be expanded to include versions in Chinese, Portuguese, Spanish and French. BRICS Magazine in English will remain the primary international issue and the project's core. Issues released for Russia, China, Brazil, Africa will be different but they will still share the same structure and sets of key materials translated from the English-language edition.

Audience

You would be able to form an accurate picture as to who the readers of the BRICS Magazine are if you look at the list of the Davos Forum participants. In Russia, the magazine's readers are the attendees of the St. Petersburg Economic Forum. Copies of the magazine are also delivered to S.D. Shibulal, Viktor Vekselberg, Jean-Pierre Raffarin, Mark Mobius and Jim O'Neal, just to name a few masterminds.

The audience can be classified into three categories:

POLITICIANS representing high-growth economies who are willing to speak out on vital issues on the BRICS agenda and want their voices to be heard in these countries and the rest of the world.

GLOBAL INVESTORS, HEADS OF CORPORATIONS and new entrepreneurs on a mission to find growth points.

ECONOMISTS AND POLITICAL SCIENTISTS whose job is to describe the current situation and identify trends.
